Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: .other who has made a more thorough study of the situation, theoretically and practically--than he. For this reason, his counsel should have weight. It is prudent for the superintendent to confer with him in private. Each can express himself fully and freely. To ask a pastor his opinion of a plan after it has been presented to the school is like asking a council its advice concerning the ordination of a candidate after the evening service has been arranged and the program printed in the papers. The aim of the pastor in this consultation will be not to substitute other plans, but to eliminate the irrelevant and to bring into more prominent expression the religious clement. To his judgment in these matters, deference is due. Third--He should serve the school. Purple garbs and papal thrones are unbecoming to the minister of Christ. Not to be ministered unto, but to minister. is an excellent motto for him as well as for his Lord. The true pastor is not content to bow gracefully to Chatauqua salutes and to repose quietly behind vases of fragrant flowers. He appreciates these tokens of esteem, but finds in them a spur to greater service. In a multitude of ways, the unobtrusive helpfulness of the pastor appears. He gathers into the school-room. A whole-hearted announcement from the pulpit, a cheerful greeting upon the street, a friendly interest in the home, does much to swell the attendance. He imparts tone to the session. The...
