As pointed out in the DSB study oil Tactical Air Warfare. acquisition of weapons arid munitions required for JPI and Precision Strike must be expeditious. Procurement of such weapons as SEW, JDAM. JSOW. etc. , should be paced by the best timeline each development program can achieve. 6. Common grid navigation accuracy for JPI systems is provided by GPS. Additionally. some of the weapons delivery options will take advantage of the precise measurements possible with GPS. These uses of GPS make the precision in JPI and the timeliness of strike operations dependent on the continuous availability of GPS signals. A concern about the jamming vulnerability of GPS has been raised in other contexts. and such vulnerability is of particular concern to JPI systems. Careful investigation and a search for countermeasures to possible GPS jamming is critical. In November 1993 the Task Force re, ponded to a speech by the Secretary of Defense on the subject of U. S. military force abilities to deal with two regional contingencies simultaneously. In this response a number of points were made which are applicable here. Our concern is that planners may be assuming that much more of the capability to deliver precision strike and interdiction power exists than is actually in place ( or will be in place under present acquisition and development plans. ) 1. The dates for initial and full operational capability are years away, although some of the building blocks are or can be made available in limited quantities. 2. There is insufficient...
