Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Sunday-School: Institutes and Normal Classes The active interest which the author of this book has taken in urging Sunday-school teachers to a higher ambition, a more thorough preparation, and a holier consecration to the work of their Master, gives force and authority to what he has to say on such a valuable department of teacher-training as the Sunday-School Institute. With the growth of our work, and the advancement of the standard of excellence in teaching, the increase of the demand on the part of teachers for any thing and all things that will help them to become better workmen in the Lord s vineyard is as gratifying as it is vigorous. The time was when the teacher was not spending much effort on personal improvement in the art and science of teaching; when good intentions were suffered largely to take the place of skill in imparting the knowledge of divine truth; when at gatherings of Sunday-school teachers gratulation at the greatness and importance of the work was more prominent than suggestion for improvement in the method of carrying it on. The work of the last few years has wrought a wonderful change. The teacher who was formerly satisfied with his attainments is now asking for light on his teaching work.
